V. Research Activities:

FSTP (Facts - Screening - and -Transforming-Processor) Project
The FSTP (Facts - Screening - and -Transforming-Processor) Expert System is a project under development, being undertaken by the Centre for Intellectual Property Rights and Advocacy (CIPRA), MHRD Chair on IPR, National Law School of India University, Bangalore in collaboration with Teles, a telecommunications company based in Berlin.

The FSTP system envisages a system which would help inventors, advocates, judges and all those involved in the patenting process in evaluating the novelty and non-obviousness of a particular invention in relation to the prior arts present in that particular field of invention. The FSTP system is based on the premise that novelty and non-obviousness of a particular invention are to a great extent objective parameters of the invention and an objective conclusion about these two parameters can be arrived at irrespective of the person evaluating these parameters. To achieve the evaluation of an invention's novelty and non-obviousness this system reeks down the invention at various levels. A similar breakdown of the prior arts is also done. Then these broken down parts of the invention are compared with their counterparts in the prior art to evaluate the novelty and non-obviousness of the invention. This team consists of Mr. Venkatesan Ponnuswamy- Research Associate,
