Their scope ranges from rumor to propaganda to cyber hybrid threats. They encompass issues of radicalization, hate speech and other forms of intimidation of populations. They potentially present risks for democratic processes and national sovereignty while presenting other societal costs that can undermine trust in the “information society”. Information disorders are varied and they don’t have a single root cause. Some of them have been enabled by the development of social media but this does not exonerate some political actors, and extremist groups in the civil society actors. They have caused disruption in elections and they have undermined confidence in the news and information sector, they have sought, directly or indirectly, to take control over media images and representations. The session will have opening remarks by panelists on issue and perspectives. The session will focus on the following objectives: <ol data-bbox="554 1308 1955 1401" style="list-style-type: none"><li>1.
